Past Life: Mainland Europe

I am hearing a French accent. I'm also feeling an attitude that can best be described as pompous and arrogant. A life in which you only had the best, and only wanted the best. You walked through your home, a wealthy large home with long hallways painted a color in the white family, with purpose and an air of importance. You did not lack compassion, and humility was still within you, though others generally did not see those attributes on the surface. You parents were far more arrogant and you tended to feel they were, for lack of a better term, snotty (this is the word closest to what I "feel" from it). Over time, you very much desired to work on your compassion for common people, and deal with those issues that normally were not dealt with directly by those of your status. Part of you desired to do the work and you felt some satisfaction from getting involved, and a part of you wanted to show everyone you could be better at it than your parents were. You felt, overall, that your parents were good to you. They raised you well and you wanted to be even better than they were; not entirely for selfish reasons, you also believed you would be living proof of their legacy after they were gone. Someone they could be proud of.

[The person you inquired about] was a similarly aged friend-type. This could be a cousin, brother or best friend. He is dressed very well in a Tudor-style outfit (though I could be off on the dress this is the closest I can identify the style). Tight-ish pants, a long tunic with huge rounded puffy shoulders, and at the neck it came up around the neck sticking upward (not laying flat). It was a colorful outfit. He is also wealthy and walks with an air of confidence, but a more laid back, fun personality. In contrast you were much more serious (again, in your early 20s).

In this particular lifetime your current partner [name removed] was also present. He was not of the same status as the two of you, but the three of you were very good friends. There was some jealousy on his part, though he tried his best to hide it and the two of you tried your best to be inclusive.

I sense that later in life the three of you were no longer close; your friendship had extended during a period of youth. I do see you writing with pen and ink, letters to them on different occasions later in life, on more business-related concerns. I'm not sensing any romantic relationships, trauma, or any significant trials or difficulties among you three during that lifetime.

Thank you for allowing me to read for you. Love and Light,
Katie
